

A pensioner travelled the equivalent of more than twice round the world for dialysis treatment – and never left Scotland.

Mary McKay had to make a 230-mile round trip from her home to hospital three times a week for two years, the Daily Record reports .

There was no dialysis unit in Argyll so she was forced to travel from Campbeltown to the Vale of Leven Hospital in Alexandria, Dunbartonshire.

Mary clocked up a total of 66,932 road miles - but the Earth's circumference is only 25,000.

The 75-year-old left home at 8.30am for the hospital journey and didn't get back until 8pm.

"I have never been abroad," Mary said. "But when the miles are added up for my dialysis treatment, I have been round the world twice."

Getty

http://www.mirror.co.uk/news/health/global-dialysis-patient-travelled-66000-miles-for-treatment-but-never-left-scotland-11111111